THE WEEK IN SOCIETY.

according to the letters of the summer correspondents society is taking a rest. The cottage people, as the occupants of the superb villas at Newport, liar Harbor and Lenox are styled, seem to devote themselves to the quieter pleasures of country life, driving being their chief occupation. The Sunday husbands being still hard at work in New-York, it seems impossible to have any greater function than a luncheon for women, dinner parties without men being voted a bore, and thus far in the age of advancement of fortunes the man of leisure is rather in the minority though sometimes for want of a better substitute the undergraduate has to serve duty where his elder male relatives would be welcomed. New Fort has numbered mong its visitors several people of title. von Birstein has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Havemeyer, and recently Prince Poniatowski, who married Miss Maud Ely Goddard, was registered at Muenchinger's. Prince Poniatowski's father was Master of the Horse to Napoleon III, and while his title was a creation of the last French Empire his family is descended from the old Lombard Counts of who in the latter part of the sixteenth century emigrated to Poland. short stay in the United States. The details of the wedding of Miss Elizabeth French to Colonel Eaton, sent by cable, were read with much interest by the many friends of the bride in this country and those people from New York who passed some weeks at Bermuda while Calonel Eaton's refractory regiment was stationed there for discipline. It is expected that invitations to join the Vande ville Club will be sent out in the coming week. The project seems to meet approval, and many places have been offered to the organizers since there has been public mention of the idea. One place spoken of is the concert room in the Madison Square Garden building, and it would require little alteration. In case the directors should lease the concert room it would be cessary for the patronesses of the assembly balls to find another room.

NIGHT, AS WAS REPORTED TO THE POLICE! A mysterious occurrence was reported at Police Headquarters last night by the police of the Twentyseventh Precinct. The first report was that at 6 20 p. m. a rowboat containing three men had been run down in the East River opposite One-hundred-andsixth st., between the New York shore and Black well's Island by the New York and New Haven transfer float No. 8. Several circumstances serve to strengthen this suspicion. The rescued man was rowed away at once, and nothing has been heard of him since, and the articles in the boat are curious ones. They include a 44-callbre, self-cocking British builded revolver, which was half-cocked and loaded when it was found, and there was also a complete suit of clothes, the presence of which cannot be accounted for by the police. There were also a pair of black-striped trousers, a dark sack cost, a white shirt, a black derby hat, two white handlerchefs, a broken locket, two brass keys, 87-44 in cash and a curiously carved figure of a baboon, made of dark-brown wood and evidently Chinese work.

"That was right, that was right, my dear." said the mother encouragingly. "And what did he say to

The girl blushed, but was undaunted.
"He asked me if you ever told me I was not to kiss a young man."
The mother began to feel that possibly she had omitted a vital link in the chain of her instructions.

A COLLECTOR'S TROUBLES.

From The London Dally News.

Collectors aometimes indulge in odd fancies. Mr. Edward Hammond, of Leominster, appears to have a fancy for collecting human skulls. One day list month he was in the Priory Churchyard in that town when the sexton, like that famous gravedigger who remembered the King's Jester before his flashes of merriment had ceased to set the tables on a rear, cast up a skull. Upon this Mr. Hammond steoped down, picked up the grim relic, and placing it in a handker-chief, together with some grass, was seen to walk away with it. Subsequently, the skull having been washed, was seen, it is said, in Mr. Hammond's office; but the business got wind and made a talk, and finely no less a body than the Home Office authorities were induced to take up the matter. It was in accordance with orders from the Home Office fast in accordance with orders from the Home Office that the Deputy Chief Constable sought out Mr. Hammond's the other day in Leominster Market, and demanded the other day in Leominster Market, and demanded the other day in Leominster Market, and demanded the restoration of "that skull." Mr. Hammond's answer was that it was no longer in his possession. He had "re-interred it," he said. Besides, in so doing he had "conducted a proper burial service over it.

More he could scarcely do, but the authorities were not yet appeased. Mr. Hammond has been charged in the removing human remains from a burial place. The removing human remains from a burial place. The From The London Daily News, Leominster Folice Court and convicted of unlawfully removing human remains from a burial place. THE STATE RESERVE STARTS ON ITS ANNUAL CRUISE.

HARD WORK AND LITTLE PLAY IN STORE FOR THE AMATEUR "CALTS" ON THE

NEW-HAMPSHIRE

That benighted piece of marine architecture built in the form of what our simple ancestor called a man-of-war, the old frigate, New-Hampshire, was towed down to Gravesend Bay yesterday, bearing 235 good men and true of the Naval Reserve of the State of New-York. The old ship has been for the last few days moored alongside the pier at Twenty-eighth-st. and East River, and has been undergoing a process of rehabilitation to render her fit for the occupancy of the reserve. A dozen men from the receivingship Vermont, at the Navy Yard, and details of porter that two men had come to the Twenty-seventh reserves have been at work on her every day. Precinct Station shortly before 7 o'clock last night There was lots of work to be done, and it was superintended by Lieutenant Arthur P. Nazro, who brought the huge hulk down here from New-London, and who will remain in her during the eruise to see that nobody purloins any of the costly Government bric-a-brac aboard. Lieutenant W. S. Of course there were a few such yesterday, but not many of them. For the major part they were the men who survived the weeling out attendant upor last year's cruise, and they went to work with will. The business man, the broke the capitalist, the professional man poure aboard in all the splendor of their bes were indistinguishable one from another in their suits of coarse canvas, and were bending their intellects to sweeping decks, polishing brass-work, running errands for officers, or hauling on great villanous hawsers, which took Dixey is a popular comedian, and "The Mascot" is a the skin from heir hands, unaccustomed to such work, and resisted with fiendish persistency the Mr. Fayerweather were mentioned for the amounts urging of their muscles. At noon the bugle sounded to quarters, and then followed an inspection by Captain Miller and his staff. Then came the "function" of formally putting the ship in commission. Captain Miller made a speech to the men, reminding them that they were there for business, and urging them to make every effort to master the details of a man-of-warsman's profession. He then read his orders from Adjutant-General Porter, and ordered the battalion paraded on the peop deck. When the band of the 1st Artillery, which goes along MR. It was 2 o'clock when the giant hawsers which bound the New-Hampshire to the pier were cast pier. To get the huge bulk of the New-Hampshire out into the stream without a collision, and to take her safely down the crowded thoroughfare of the East River, was a job requiring the exercise of great care and skill; but the captains view of her towering decks, alive with whitewind was with the ship, and she made good time first stage of the cruise was over.

Just as the New-Hampshire dropped her anchor in Gravesend Bay the blue pennant of Admiral Walker was seen coming fluttering down between the green walls of the Narrows, above the white ing in the sunlight. The two war ships rounded to and dropped their anchors to the northward of the vellow-hulled New-Hampshire, and amid this fleet and dropped their anchors to the northward of the yellow-hulled New-Hampshire, and amid this fleet of vessels the Vamoose must not be forgotten. She is to be Captain Miller's dispatch boat, and went down the bay ahead of the New-Hampshire. When the fleet had anchored Captain Miller boarded the Vamoose and went to the Chicago to report to Admiral Walker.

All the way down the bay the men of the Reserve were kept at work. They were instructed in hardling the lead and in the use of the chart, and were "told off" in gangs to exercise their muscles by hauling up a fender here or sending up a spar there. Of course, after the old ship was anchored, there was "first quarters". One of the "rat things Captain Miller always does is to familiarize his men with the fascinating exercise of "fire quarters." It is a wise precaution, especially on board such an old wooden hulk as the New-Hampshire. But perhaps the old ship should not be spoken of in such a disrespectful manner. She is roomy and comfortable, if she is not pretty, and is adjultably adapted for the purposes of the Reserve. An effort is being made to have her assigned permanently by the Government to the uses of the battalion.

Lieutemant Satterlee, the ordnance officer of the Reserves, came to the New-Hampshire yesterday, before she left the pier, with a tug load of rifles and howitzers, which have been lent by the Government from the apprentice receiving-ship Minnesota for use during the cruise. To-day fifty men of the Naval Reserve in Rochester will arrive on board the New-Hampshire. There will be a general muster to-day and the reading of the Articles of War on board the New-Hampshire. There are two new officers in the battalion this year, Lieutenant Slonn, who is aide to Captain Miller, and Lieutenant Stayton, formerly of the Navy.

WHAT AN ASTRAL BODY IS.

Theosophist in Lucifer.

A Theosophist in Lucifer.

The structure of the inner astral man is definite and coherent. Just as the outer body has a spine which is the column whereon the being sastains liself with the brain at the top, so the astral body has its spine and brain. It is material, for it is made of matter, however, finely divided, and is not of the nature of the spirit.

After the maturity of the child before birth this form is fixed, coherent and lasting, undergoing but small alteration from that day until death. And so also as to its brain, that remains unchanged until the body is given up, and does not, like the outer brain, give up cells to be replaced by others from hour to hour. These inner parts are thus more permanent than the outer correspondents to them. Our material organs, bones and tissues, are undergoing change each instant. This is not the case with the inner form. It alters only from life to life, being constructed at the time of reincarnation to last for a whole period of existence. For it is the model fixed by the present evolutionary proportions for the outer body. It is the collector, as if were, of the visible atoms which make has as we outwardly appear. So at birth it is potentially of a certain size, and when that limit is reached it stops the further extension of the body. At the same time the outer body is kept in shape by the inner one until the period of decay. And this decay, followed by death, is not due to bodily disintegration per second to the fact that the term of the astral body is reached when it is no longer able to hold the outer frame intact. Its power to resist the impact and war of the material molecules being exhausted, the sleep of denth superveies.

Now, as in our physical form the brain and spine are the centres for nerves, so in the other there are the nerves which ramily from the inner brain and spine and the mature of currents than nerves, as we understant

COLLEGES AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS. Mrs. Lucy Fayerweather, the widow of the wellknown leather merchant, Daniel B. Fayerweather, died last night at Rutland, Vt. Mr. Fayerweather' will was one of the most remarkable documents of the hind, which was ever drawn up. In his will there were bequests amounting to $2,100,000, made to twenty-one different colleges and universities in all parts of the country, and the sum of $95,000 was divided among five hospitals. One remarkable feature about it at the time was that the outlook seemed to be that the will would be probated, and the property distributed according to the provisions of the document without a contest. In his will the testator gave to his widow, Lucy Payerweather the sum of $10,000, to be paid as soon as the executors qualified. She was also given the house, No. 11 East Pifty sevinth st., with its contents; the stable at No. 145 East Fifty-seventh-st., together with the horses, carriages, etc., it contained, and the sum of $15,000 annually for life in lieu of dower.
